
How To Get Rid of Fleas and Ticks

Posted by rayter - 2007/12/16 06:26

Just wanna share this very helpful article...

Getting Rid of Fleas and Ticks

Fleas and ticks are common problems to most pets. No matter how hard you try to keep their proper hygiene, there will still come a time that your pets will be infested by these bugs.

If you find flea and tick attached onto your pet's fur and skin, don't panic. You will just have to find the best ways to totally remove and get rid of these bugs the best way and the soonest way possible.

According to research, fleas can lay as much as 50 eggs each day. It's really irritating especially when you don't know the best way to get rid of it. On the other hand, it usually takes eight hours or up to 2 days before a tick can transmit diseases after its first suck on your pet's blood. This one is really harmful especially with the physical condition of your pet.

Two major problems are considered. First one is the possibility that your dog will become weak and unresponsive to trainings and plays while the other one is the effect of these bugs on your pet's skin. Fleas and ticks are usually the major reason why most pets suffer skin allergies and similar conditions. Before your pet's situation gets worst, you have to find ways to completely get rid of these bug problems.

Before, people have known an old process of removing fleas and ticks onto their pet's body. This old and improper technique of removing and killing fleas is to squeeze its body with your fingers. Studies have shown that this process forces the contents of the tick's stomach into your bloodstream, which is of course, can be a threat to you as well.

There is also this old advice which is to coat the tick with petroleum jelly or burn it with a match to get it to release its grip. These methods seem to be helpful but are actually ineffective. Instead of the two most horrible processes of killing ticks, you can just use a tine-point tweezers to grab the tick by the head, making it so close to the skin as possible.

After successfully removing the tick, clean the bite wound on your dog's skin and wash your hands and tweezers at the same time. However, this technique is time consuming and a bit messy. There is still one possible and perfect technique to absolutely get rid of these irritating bugs. This is with the use of flea and tick control products from websites like fleaandtack-4less.com

Flea and tick control products keep you and your pets happy with the least-toxic control methods. These items include a preventive maintenance to make sure that your lovable pet is out of danger. Tackling ticks, monthly spraying application, proper ways on how to remove a tick, a better and more effective approach plus a new generation of pesticides is the valuable package provided with these products. You will not have any troubles in using these flea and tick controllers because each item was prepared with the best and most effective method in mind. With just one spray or a simple add-on to the water content used in bathing your pet will instantly repel and kill fleas, ticks, and even mosquitoes for total pest control! This is the best and most recommended way to get rid of these bugs to your dog's healthy body.

=====